

This memorable journal of one year in a remote cottage on the west Irish coast is destined to become a classic of Irish nature writing. For nearly twenty years, Michael Vineys popular column in the Irish Times, Another Life, has captured the beauties and mysteries of the natural world in Ireland. This lyrical month-by-month journal affirms his reputation as a uniquely gifted, compassionate, and informed commentator. A Years Turning chronicles his familys life of self-sufficiency in the country. Viney weaves personal memories and reflections as he observes the effects of one years passing on the land, animals, and landscape around him, to create a mosaic of all the years, each month an essay in remembrance. He begins with January and the snow, gale-force winds, and rough seas. Come June, the house breathes gently, all doors and windows open to whatever breeze there is...besieged by light. Come December, it ends, or begins again, the years turning. This is the culmination of two decades lived close to land and its creatures.
