

A Hopi coming of age ceremony goes sadly awry when one of the Kachina dancers falls ill and dies. Gerry, the district nurse, can tell it is from rabies, and that the boys who were in the ceremony are likely at risk. Since they, and their sponsors, have left the village for a secret destination, which is part of the ritual, they can not be reached for the life-saving inoculations. Gerry and her companion, Ric, a teacher in the Hopi high school, use every resource to find them. Interviewing old timers, sending out posses and calling in the tribal and state police fail. They finally put their hopes on a program for the laptop computer they have been using in their health survey of the village.
