

Normally, visitors to a Christian church are always made welcome, often more than welcome! But what happens in your church when they come to us, enquiring about marriage, baptism, or another rite of passage or similar such service? Some priests, pastors, and ministers, and their congregations, see those coming to us for these purposes as an unnecessary distraction, or even intrusion, on the real work of the church. But can we, in the mainline churches, afford to treat anyone coming to us, for any purpose, in these terms? And aren't those asking about a Christian service, actually asking us to be the church, and inviting us to become part of their lives, at least for a period of time? This study, by the Venerable Dr Bradley S Billings, draws on the author's experience as vicar of a parish church in Melbourne, Australia, that conducts around 100 marriages and even more baptisms each year, and which has made considerable progress in reaching out through rites of passage.
